Supplier relationships at the company are managed by the procurement office on behalf of every department that buys goods or services.

New suppliers must be admitted before any purchase order is raised, and the office keeps the admission file for the life of the contract.

The five steps for onboarding a new supplier are listed here:

1. Collect the signed supplier agreement and file a copy with procurement;
2. Verify the supplier tax registration against the national register;
3. Obtain two written trade references dated within the last year;
4. Complete the security questionnaire and have the risk team approve it;
5. Create the supplier record in the ledger and issue the vendor number.

Departments that skip admission are asked to regularise the supplier within thirty days, and unpaid invoices are held until they do.

Questions about the admission process can be sent to the procurement desk, which answers during normal office hours on working days.
